

Testing String Theory with Cosmological Observations

Prof. Dr. Robert Brandenberger

Department of Physics, McGill University, Montreal, Kanada

Early universe cosmology holds the promise to be able to provide explanations for a wealth of observational data. I will argue that new fundamental physics such as superstring theory is required in order to develop satisfactory models of the very early universe. Such models can then make specific predictions for upcoming experiments.