

Sea-level rise: are we pulling the plug from Antarctica?

Prof. Dr. Anders Levermann

Potsdam-Institut für Klimafolgenforschung, Potsdam

Sea-level rise is a certain consequence of anthropogenic climate change. But how long and how high it is going to rise will depend critically on the potentially unstable regions in Antarctica. This talk discusses these regions and its consequences for coastal protection world-wide.